Professor Faiz Ahmed unearths a lost history of Afghanistan, the first Muslim-majority country to gain independence, codify its own laws, and ratify a constitution after the fall of the Ottoman Empire. As US policymakers continue to debate the future of American involvement in this pivotal country, the lecture will explore what lessons we can learn from rediscovering Afghanistan’s own legal and constitutional history from Afghan and other perspectives in the region.

Faiz Ahmed is Associate Professor of History at Brown University.
