Course overview:

This course is an introduction to Spanish (and to a lesser extent, Portuguese) possessions in the Americas from the pre-Colombian era through early independence. It revolves around three main questions: How did cultural expectations impact first contact and Spanish and Portuguese conquest? What were the factors that shaped daily life in the colonies? And lastly: What led to independence? To help answer these questions, the course is arranged both chronologically and thematically: classes at the start of the semester cover the 14th and 15th centuries, while the last few weeks cover the late 18th century. In between, we'll cover particular aspects of the colonial experience by focusing on important themes that span longer periods of development. Given that the Spanish and Portuguese held a vast expanse of territory, at times covering almost one and a half continents (depending on how you define a continent!), this course will focus primarily on the two largest sites of Spanish colonization – the Viceroyalty of New Spain (Mexico) and the Viceroyalty of Peru (modern Peru and Bolivia, and parts of modern Chile, Argentina, and Ecuador, to name a few). The Caribbean, Colombia (Nueva Granada), and Brazil will also be discussed, with other regions making occasional appearances as needed.

This course will incorporate a wide variety of perspectives on Latin American history – both primary sources (first-hand accounts, both written and visual) as well as secondary sources (scholarly analysis). Lectures and readings from the textbook will support students' understanding of these sources by providing the historical context. More than the straightforward "facts" of history – ie memorized names and dates – students will develop analytical skills and the ability to explain historical events in terms of causality, comparison, and change over time.

Goals: By the end of the course, students should:

- Be familiar with the development of colonial Latin America and the various cultures (European, indigenous, African) that combined to shape the region
- Be able to give their own explanation for major events in colonial Latin American history, such as initial conquest and independence
- Be able to analyze and interpret a primary source via a close reading and understanding of the context of the source's production
- Be able to deconstruct and critique secondary source arguments
- Be able to create a strong thesis statement for an interpretive essay, and use a combination of secondary and primary sources to support their arguments

Required Books:

Cheryl E. Martin and Mark Wasserman, Latin America and its People, 3rd edition, Vol. 1. Prentice Hall. ISBN #: 978-0-205-05469-5

Townsend, Camilla. Malintzin's Choices. Albuquerque: University of New Mexico Press, 2006.

Both are available at the bookstore, but many libraries should have a copy of Malintzin's Choice – try requesting it on ez-borrow if Newark's copy is checked out. All other readings will be posted on Blackboard.

Grading and Assignments:

Participation – 20%

Active participation and preparation for class are an essential part of the learning experience. The participation grade will be based on oral contributions to discussion sections (five times over the course of the semester), short writing assignments, attendance, and occasional quizzes on the reading at the instructor's discretion. Questions on the exams will draw from both the lectures and the textbook. Information from the other readings may also appear on exams, and will be necessary to complete the papers. There will be short assignments connected to the majority of non-textbook readings, especially in preparation for discussion.

Your voice is important to our conversation! By speaking in class, you help other students learn, and the more perspectives we hear in the classroom, the better our course will be. If you are shy or unaccustomed to speaking in class, let me know, and I can offer you some strategies and adaptations for class participation. Do not, however, assume that you have an "A" in participation simply because you have shown up to class and listened to the lecture or discussion for that day. Rather, you must demonstrate your engagement with the material and your ability to collaborate in the learning process. Each class, even those marked "lecture," will include some discussion and participation by students.

Papers – 35%

Essay #1 – Primary source analysis – 15%

Two to three page paper offering a careful analysis of one primary source describing the conquest and/or its immediate aftermath, due February 24.

Essay #2 – Secondary plus primary source analysis – 20%

Four to five page paper using both secondary and primary sources to analyze the intersections of race, class, gender, and/or other sociocultural factors of your choosing, due April 16.

As you can see, the two papers build off of each other, and allow you to master one skill before using it in combination with another skill. Late papers will incur a significant reduction in their grade – in all but the most exceptional cases, to a C. If you need an extension, you must talk to me in person by the class before the paper is due – extensions will not be granted over e-mail. Of course, I will always accept papers turned in before the deadline!

Exams – 45%

Midterm – 20%

The midterm will be a combination of a timed, take-home, open book essay exam (to be done on March 12), and an in-class, closed book short definitions exam (on March 24).

Final – 25%

The final exam will be closed-book and will consist of essay questions and definitions. Our final exam is scheduled for May 12 from 3-6 pm.

Attendance:

Attendance will be taken at every class and will be consequential to your grade (especially given that it is impossible to participate if you don't attend). Any student who misses eight classes through any combination of excused and unexcused absences will not earn credit from the course and should withdraw.

Honor system:

You must follow the University's guidelines on academic integrity. As is required by the department, all students are required to sign the Rutgers Honor Code Pledge. To receive credit, every major assignment must have your signature under the following phrase: "On my honor, I have neither received nor given any unauthorized assistance on this examination / assignment." Papers will be uploaded on blackboard and reviewed by turnitin.com, which will flag any possible instances of plagiarism. (We will review the definition of plagiarism before the first essay.) Assignments that are found to be counter to the honor code will receive a grade of 0.

Classroom standards:

Please be respectful to your fellow students and keep distracting behaviors to a minimum. I expect full engagement from students in the classroom for the entirety of the class period. This means arriving on time and staying for the duration of the course, not carrying on side conversations, not doing other homework in class, and not using your cell phone or other electronic device for non-class purposes. If you want to use an electronic device (laptop, tablet) to take notes, you must get permission from me first, and I will ask you to show me your note-taking method.

History is the study of real people and real events. Our readings and conversations will occasionally address physical and sexual violence, as well as issues of race, ethnicity, and otherness. Please come speak with me if you think you will find any of these topics triggering so we can create a strategy for dealing with them.

My goal is to offer each student the opportunity to be successful in the course. The assignments and assessments (papers, exams) have been designed to give you the tools necessary to fulfill the course expectations, and the ability to demonstrate your mastery of the subject. For those who need extra support or flexibility, due to disabilities, language barriers, complicated personal lives, or other issues, I am more than willing to work with you to develop a plan that allows you the best chance at achieving the course goals. On the other hand, you must be proactive in developing these plans with me. My general teaching philosophy is to be flexible about ways to reach certain standards, but very strict about the standards themselves. An easy way to assess your own progress in the course is to make sure that you can answer the guiding question of a given class (see the class schedule) a day or two after the class has been held.

Contact:

I will hold office hours by appointment, generally between 3:50 and 5:50 on Tuesdays, and before or after class on Thursdays.

E-mail is usually the best way to get ahold of me, and I will respond within 48 hours if you email me during the week (longer on weekends). E-mails should be addressed to me in a professional manner, using appropriate grammar, capitalization, and full sentences; I retain the right to not respond to an e-mail if it does not meet these standards. (In the spirit of teaching, however, I will let you know if you need to resend an e-mail.)

The contents of this syllabus are subject to change at the instructor's discretion. All changes will be posted on Blackboard; please make sure to check Blackboard/your Rutgers e-mail frequently.
