Course description:
Scholars often characterize the Mediterranean Sea as a multi-cultural and multi-confessional space of encounter, competition, and exchange. Its geographic placement between three continents has afforded the Mediterranean a significant degree of unity in spite of its great diversity which, historians argue, has fostered unique social and cultural relationships. How do phenomena such as human displacements affect that very unity that historians have highlighted? Does it disrupt or confirm it? The aim of this course is twofold. On the one hand, it will focus on human displacements as a lens through which to produce a history of the Mediterranean. On the other, it will use the Mediterranean as the frame through which to study the phenomenon of displacements historically. Among the cases we will study throughout the semester are the expulsion of religious minorities like Jews and Muslims, accounts of captivity and slavery, histories of European colonization and decolonization in North Africa, the rise of the nation state and population exchanges, as well as the ways in which modern day wars, climate change, and economic instability and inequality have set off an unprecedented mass scale of contemporary population displacements. Some questions this course will consider are: What are the challenges or benefits of studying the phenomenon of mobility and displacements across time? To what extent is a regional focus like that of the Mediterranean more productive than, say, national histories, to analyze the phenomenon of human displacements?

Learning Objectives:
Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:
• demonstrate a basic level of competence in differentiating between different periods in the history of the Mediterranean, and the significance of historical context.
• grasp how and why migrations have differed in time and space.
• read scholarship critically.
• learn to read and analyze primary sources.
• learn to interrogate maps as historical artifacts.
• think historically and critically about issues of migrants, refugees, and displacements in the Mediterranean.
• learn to use digital tools for producing knowledge (historical and interactive map of displacement in the Mediterranean)

Required Texts:

All other readings are available on Canvas. You must print out and bring your readings to every class.

Plagiarism and Academic Dishonesty: As an academic community dedicated to the creation, dissemination, and application of knowledge, Rutgers University is committed to fostering an intellectual and ethical environment based on the principles of academic integrity. Academic integrity is essential to the success of the University's educational and research missions, and violations of academic integrity constitute serious offenses against the entire academic community.

Students are required to view the Plagiarism video on Canvas and take the quiz by no later than September 22. The video is available in the Modules section of the Canvas site. See below under assignments.

Assignments:
• This is an upper-level history course, and your engagement with the readings and in class discussion is crucial. Students must come to class having done the readings and ready to participate in class discussions. All discussions will count towards your final grade.

• There will be a series of short videos and quizzes in the module section of Canvas that you will have to complete before submitting paper 1 [Types of Sources; Why Citations Matter; Turabian Citations; Academic Integrity] Each quiz will count for half a credit point.

• Students will write TWO papers (800 words, 4 pages). The essay prompts will be posted on Canvas one week in advance. No email submissions will be accepted. Assignment 1 is due on 9/27, and assignment 2 is due on 12/1. Papers will be submitted via Turn It In on Canvas. Email submissions will not be graded, and you will receive a 0 for the assignment. No late submissions will be accepted under any circumstances. Your writing assignments MUST include the Rutgers Honor Pledge: “On my honor, I have neither received nor given any unauthorized assistance on this examination (assignment).”
Digital Project
Using the digital tool Omeka (for making online exhibits), students will create a historical map of displacements in the Mediterranean from the 15th century to today. A guiding question for this assignment will be: What can mapping teach us about displacements in the Mediterranean? One of the goals of this assignment is to contest discourses about the refugee and migrant crises in the Mediterranean region by looking at migration patterns historically. Each student will select one primary source from a list that will be provided on canvas. From the source students will identify places of displacement to be mapped out, and they will produce a 250 to 300 word analysis of the source, which will be included in the map. Your written piece MUST include a thesis statement. Students will also select works of art or artifacts, literature, documentaries, music or other sound material from the period and region they are studying to add to the map. Each student will consult the source with the instructor by 10/27. Students will present their projects on 12/8 and 12/13. All final projects will be submitted by 12/20.
