Course description
This course explores contemporary Islam(s) and Muslim communities from a sociological perspective and provides a critical understanding and analysis of Muslim intellectual, religious, and cultural productions and traditions. The course looks at social, economic and political realities and experiences related to Islam(s) and Muslims. It analyses the imbrication of Islam and ‘Muslimness’ with race, ethnicity, class, gender etc. The course provides context and history to the understanding of social, political and intellectual movements and social realities related to Islam(s) and Muslims with a focus on North America. The course encourages students to investigate central questions in sociology in relation to contemporary Islam(s) and Muslims such as the relationship between religion and secularism, postcolonialism and orientalism.

The course consists of lectures, seminars, workshops and students-led discussions using texts, images and videos. We use Blackboard (BB) to access course documents, and the power-point of the course will be accessible after the session. We use BB for occasional online discussions on specific topics as well as to exchange relevant information, resources and links.

Course goals
The general aim of this course is to provide context, history and complexity to the understanding of contemporary Islam(s) and Muslim communities. At the end of the term, students should be able to:
- demonstrate essential knowledge and understanding of Muslim intellectual, religious, and cultural productions and traditions, and how experiences of Islam(s) are thought, built and shaped through social, political, economic realities.
- understand essential conceptual ideas and theories related to Islam(s) and Muslims.
- be equipped with a sociological approach of contemporary Islam(s) and Muslim communities that can be used to broaden understanding of the world from everyday interactions to transnational realities.
- be able to identify and explain several main theoretical perspectives about Islam(s) and Muslim communities and their interactions with concepts of race, class, gender, ethnicity, etc.
- discuss different ways to think about Islam(s) and Muslims and formulate theoretical questions.
- begin exploring research horizons and relating research questions to broader sociological concerns.
Course Requirements
Learning is a collaborative experience of mutual sharing and learning. It is important to read all assignments before class in order to be able to benefit from course fully. The weekly readings are on Blackboard. No need to buy the books, all the course material is available on Blackboard. You must check it regularly since readings on the syllabus are subject to change. This course will test students on material presented in lectures, class discussions, texts, images and films. You are expected to read the weekly assignments carefully and to come to class prepared to discuss the readings.

Grading
20% class participation: your active presence and your participation to the class dynamic and discussion.
20% oral presentation: in a group of 2 students you will give a 15 mn max. presentation on the weekly topic preferably based on the weekly readings.
20% reaction paper: you will write a short paper of around 500 words reflecting on the weekly topic preferably based on the weekly readings. The deadline is Friday 11.59pm of the same week.
40% essay: you will write an essay of around 1000 words answering ONE question in the list of questions that will be made available on BB by the end of the semester. The Deadline is Saturday December 7th 11.59pm.
