Course description
What is gender and why do we need it? How is it shaped and constructed? Does gender rely solely on the dichotomy masculinities/femininities? How does gender help us understand issues of race, class, sexuality etc.? This course introduces a sociological perspective on the topic of gender and explores critically theories of gender and feminisms. It will look at how gender norms, roles, relations and practices are shaped through social structures, institutions and power relations and further analyse the imbrication of gender and sexualities with race, class, religion, ethnicity etc. We will also explore critically feminist theories as well as core feminist concepts such as patriarchy, sexism and intersectionality. The course encourages students to investigate central themes in sociology such as violence, family, education, health, work, state, nation, religion etc. in relation to theories of gender, feminisms, and sexualities.

The course will consist of lectures, seminars and workshops using texts, images and videos. We will be using Blackboard (BB) to access course documents, and the power-point of the course will be accessible after the session. We will also use BB to exchange relevant information, resources and links. The weekly lecture and seminar readings will be posted on Blackboard. You must check it regularly since readings on the syllabus are subject to change.

Course goals
The general aim of this course is to contextualize, historicize, and approach through a complex and multi-layered lens gender normes, relations and practices. At the end of the term, students should be able to:
- demonstrate how gender relations, norms and practices are thought, built and shaped through social, political, economic realities and their imbricated dynamics.
- understand essential conceptual ideas and theories related to gender, feminisms and sexualities.
- be equipped with a sociological lens that can be used to broaden an understanding of the world from everyday interactions to transnational realities.
- be able to identify and explain several main theoretical perspectives about gender, feminisms and sexualities and their interactions with concepts of race, class, ethnicity, religion etc.
- discuss different ways to think about gender and formulate theoretical questions.
- begin exploring research horizons and relating research questions to broader sociological concerns.
Course Requirements
Learning is a collaborative experience of mutual sharing and learning. It is important to read all texts before class in order to be able to benefit from the lecture and seminar fully. Again, no need to buy the books, all the course material will be made available on Blackboard. You must check it regularly since readings on the syllabus are subject to change. This course will test students on material presented in lectures, class discussions, texts, images and films. Again, you are expected to read the weekly assignments carefully and to come to class prepared to discuss the readings.

Academic integrity
Plagiarism and cheating will not be tolerated. The Rutgers Academic Integrity Policy will apply to all course work. If you have any doubt about what constitutes plagiarism or cheating, ask me and/or consult the Rutgers Academic Integrity Policy: http://academicintegrity.rutgers.edu/integrity.shtml. Take precautions by always referencing the materials you have read by adding a footnote, endnote, or citing your source text in parenthesis. Referencing shows you have done serious research, and that you have acknowledged the work of other scholars and engage critically with their work and ideas. It is important not to rely on one or two sources exclusively, and diversify your sources that can include books, academic articles, newspaper articles, online or printed magazines, internet websites, films etc.

Grading
20% class participation: your active presence and your participation to the class dynamic and discussion.
20% oral presentation: in a group of 2 students you will give a 15 mn max presentation on one session topic (based on a lecture, seminar, text, class discussion or film).
20% reaction paper: you will write a short paper of around 400 words reflecting on a text, discussion, a research question, or a video of the lecture and seminar of the week. The deadline will be Friday midnight of the same week.
