Office Hours: Conklin 326 Wed. 4-6pm

Course Description: This course is a general survey of Latin American history from 1800 to the present, providing students familiarity with the region and preparing them for future, more specialized studies. While Latin America is united by a common history of Spanish and Portuguese imperialism, it is also an incredibly diverse region, presenting myriad problems for historical analysis. In this course, we will focus on popular politics and how different groupings of people found ways to campaign for rights and resources through the political and economic transformations of the last 200 years. Key themes addressed will include national identity and citizenship; gender, sexuality, and race; and globalization, human rights, and migration.

This course includes a significant collaborative, digital component:

“States of Belonging: Citizenship, Identity, and Globalization in Modern Latin America”

Why do we live in nations at all? This project charts the transformations, variations, and contestations of nationhood and the relationship of citizen and state over the course of Modern Latin American history. When most of Latin America gained independence from the Spanish and Portuguese empires in the early 19th century, just about no one thought of themselves as Mexican, Venezuelan, or Brazilian – that is, as a member of a nation. One hundred years later, however, national identity was fundamental to most peoples’ worldview and sense of self; today, 200 years after independence, we are now witness to a resurgence of nationalism across the region. Through two centuries of revolution, repression, war, and democracy, the nation-state emerged as the foremost political entity of our time as Latin Americans fought for rights, resources, and equality through this institution. In Spring 2020, this course will collectively develop a web-based historical map/timeline that tracks the variations and changes in the ideas and experiences of citizenship across time and space. Students will be provided a curated selection of primary and secondary sources. Individually and with partners, students will create short descriptions and analyses of these sources, catalog the sources, and local them in time and space on the shared website. At the end of the semester, students will be prompted to select a subset of sources from this shared site to write a final paper (5 pages) on national identity and citizenship in Modern Latin American history.

This course is founded on student-led critical analysis of historical writing and sources. Students will learn how to evaluate conflicting historical narratives and assess why and how these narratives matter. Students will consider the value of different forms of historical representation and perspective, such as history “from below,” micro-history, women’s history, global history, and biography. Students will learn how to interpret and evaluate a wide array of primary sources (including correspondence, writing, oral testimonies, legal documents, images, and maps) and practice using sources to elaborate or challenge narratives about the past. In addition to a strong understanding of the major problems in Latin American History, by the end of the semester students will have a strong introduction to historical thinking as an integral part of a liberal education and a way of approaching intellectual problems.

The goals of this course are to provide students with:

a scholarly familiarity with the region and the historical problems debated both within and outside of the academy in regards to Latin American history.

analytical skills for reading, interpreting and evaluating historical writing.

skills for writing longer papers consisting of complex, multi-step arguments; for expressing one’s ideas succinctly, clearly and convincingly; and for making and organizing evidence-based arguments.

analytical skills for using a historical approach to intellectual problems of many sorts.
